WHAT DOES UPCYCLED FOOD MEAN?

Upcycling means finding new, higher-value uses for items that would otherwise go to waste.

It is distinct from recycling, which is when something is broken down into base materials and then turned into new products, like aluminum cans that are melted and go on to become new aluminum cans, or plastic bottles that become fleece fabric.

Examples of ingredients that can be upcycled include sub-grade produce (i.e., bruised apples, carrots that look like horror movie monsters, and misshapen tomatoes); scraps from food preparation (like onion skins and potato peels); and byproducts from food processing.
